INTELLIGENCE 13

25X1X The Chinese Communist Party has been quite successful in imposing strict political control over military elements. In contrast to Nationalist newspaper policy, the press under the new regime seldom headlines names of military leaders. Personal glorification of these leaders is carefully avoided in the press and on public occasions. Stress is laid on "collective heroism." In this way the new government is breaking away from the struggle for power between the politicians and the military.

This document is hereby regraded to CONFIDENTIAL in accordance with the letter of 15 October 1978 from the Director of Central Intelligence to the Archivist of the United States.
